

Africa Croons

"Mabel," 6-year-old chimpanzee, is usually in some form of mischief, but now and then he has his weak moments. He seems to be whispering, "Whose little baby is that?" in the ear of 24-month-old Mary Cravin, daughter of the New York explorer who brought Mabel over from an African jungle. Or perhaps he's singing a lullaby.

Southern Farmers
Vote Tomorrow:
Cotton Control

ATHENS, Ga., Dec. 13.—Farmers in cotton producing states will tell the government by ballot tomorrow if they want the Bankhead cotton production control act continued for another year.

On the eve of the day for the referendum officials were completing final details, with "election" committees named and voting precincts designated at convenient locations in the counties.

For several months farmers have heard arguments on the act. They are to answer the question as to continuing the act for the crop year of June 1, 1935, to May 31, 1936. Two-thirds of the total voters must favor the act before it can be continued in force.

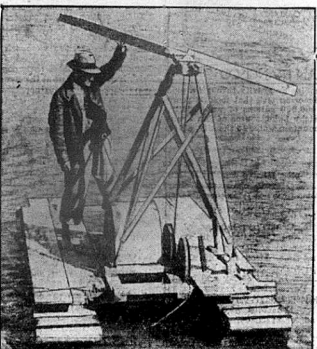

Persons qualified to vote in the referendum are designated as those "who have the legal or equitable right as owner, tenant, share-cropper, or otherwise to produce cotton on any cotton farm, or part thereof, in the United States."

Anglers Display New Curves

A hook like this would probably have to be baited with a python, but, just the same, these Miami nymphs seem optimistic about their chances of bagging a whale or something, judging by their smiles.

Wind Runs This Sailless Boat

Here's a new use for a windmill—to run a boat. A power belt, running from the mill to the propeller harnesses the power of the wind. Two windmills—one of which has not yet been adjusted—keep the craft on an even keel. It's the invention of a Dallas, Tex., man.

A Christmas
Prize in Person

"DO YOU ever win anything in these contests you are always entering?" Muriel Wilson queried of her sister Agnes.

"Not yet," Agnes laughed. "But by the law of averages I should win something."

"Soon, I'd say," Muriel said smiling. "You've been entering contests of one kind and another ever since we were infants and mother entered you in a pretty baby contest."

"That's where I began my losing. If I win now, I'd probably have kept on winning like these people we read about who live on what they make from contests."

"Hokey!" Muriel scoffed. "What makes you do it, anyway?"

"Just my love of adventure. I'm really a born gambler—in a discreet way, of course. That's why I scribble for my living, just to see if my brain children will find a place or come back home to me."

"Was it your love of adventure, or gambling spirit or whatever you call it, that made you turn down Harold Ryan three years ago when he came home from college with his cousin Fred to spend the holidays? Now, why did you do that, Agnes? He was everything everyone would want in a husband—looks, family money, and aren't we always told that marriage is the great adventure?"

"Maybe it is an adventure but what sort of a gamble is it to marry a man who already has everything. I preferred to gamble with my own career."

Harold decided to deliver the Prize in Person.

"And now that you've made a success where is the gamble in it?" Muriel carefully stuck a stick of bubble gum in the knot of her red tulle ribbon.

"Since you ask me so pointedly, Muriel dear, I think, perhaps, if Harold lost his money during the depression, as so many did, and if he were to present himself now as a man winning his way through his own efforts, I might trust myself to adventure along with him. But, I fancy, it is too late. He's probably found some less adventurous soul ere this."

"Most likely," Muriel answered, as she rose to answer the door bell which had been persistently ringing. "Guess we're home alone."

Five minutes later she was back, trying vainly to refrain from any show of excitement.

"Some one on business for you, Agnes. He's the persistent kind, insisted he had to see you right now."

"Oh, well, all right. I'll go down and get it over with," Agnes took off her smock and departed.

Muriel heard Agnes' surprised exclamation, but it was some time before she was summoned to join the two in the living room below.

"Muriel is just dying to congratulate me," Agnes gaily greeted her younger sister. "Behold, sister mine, I've actually won in a contest. You see, Harold is managing editor now of the paper that was running this particular contest. When the judges were sort of stuck as to which of these people had won second prize they referred the matter to him and, recognizing your honorable sister's 'dumb' among the three, he immediately decided in her favor and came, in person, to deliver it."

"But I thought it was for another reason it was to congratulate you," Muriel did not try to conceal her disappointment.

"There he," Harold answered promptly. "I let Agnes speak first. But the reason I have for bringing Agnes the prize is person was to see if I would win this prize person."

Just then the door of the room adjoining was thrown open and another overcoated young man appeared. "This time it was Agnes' turn to lose astonishment."

"Of all things, Fred Ryan! Here you been, there all the time?"

"Sure thing. I came with Harold, a sort of moral support. You see, Muriel and I have our wedding all planned. Let's make it a double one."

To which bright idea they all joyfully assented, hugging one another and shouting "Merry Christmas."

The tropics, dead men, pirate gold, a titled woman and other mysterious ingredients make up the fantastic "mystery" of the Galapagos Islands, which Capt. G. They are on route to the islands, hoping to learn the identity of two persons whose bodies were found there recently, and the whereabouts of Baroness de Warner Weathers, of Vienna, below, self-styled "island empress."

A Country
Doctors' Wife

CADDY lighted the fire in the fireplace. She switched on the Christmas lights for the tree. She pulled down the shades, and pushed an easy chair towards the fire. Halcy would be home any time now, cold and weary from his round of calls on sick people. This was their first Christmas eve together since they had been married.

Halcy had started out on his rounds at noon. At three he had telephoned to her to say that he was obliged to abandon his err. The snow was too deep. He had borrowed a pair of snowshoes and a fur cap, and with bag in hand, was about to walk a road leading through the woods to a small shack where a sick woman lay waiting his ministrations. At Caddy's worried inquiries, he said it would take him a couple of hours.

Caddy stared at the names. This country practice covered miles and miles. Halcy was conscientious. He never failed to reach his patients somehow, but he was tired and worn out. And Caddy herself was often lonely. Her plans for fun, for little parties at home, usually ended in trying to get someone to fill Halcy's place. She knew it would be like this. Halcy had warned her. She was sensible and patient. Yet tonight . . . Christmas eve, and Halcy's birthday. She also simply couldn't sigh to have anything go wrong.

"Halcy," she called. "That you, Caddy?"

"Caddy," he called. "The drifts are so deep I can't walk through them. I've got to wait until safe, and within two miles of that little shack. But none of the farmers near here has a team of horses. I really need one to pull me through. It's tough going."

"Oh," breathed Caddy, trying not to sound dismay.

"Caddy, I wonder," he hesitated. She could tell he was tired by the tone in his voice. "If you could possibly get Len Sutter's team of oxen and drive here for me, I simply can't ask him to do it himself. He has his daughter home for the holidays and her family. It's Christmas."

"Caddy could" not speak. She knew what this meant. Hours of being out in the storm. Heaven knows where when they would get home.

"Wait! Wait, darling . . . to help me out?"

Then she remembered something her father had said to her on her wedding day:

"You will never be allowed to forget you are the wife of a country doctor. But I think he's worth it . . . if you are!"

"Caddy," she called over the telephone she said, "All right. Stay where you are. Get warm and rested, and I'll be there by Shanghai Express!"

The tedious drive behind the worn second engine. The snow she sifted down over the telephone. It blinded her. She was not actually suffering, but she was pretty uncomfortable. On . . . and on . . . and on. The whirling curtain swept before her. The snow drifted across the broad back of the patient beast. They took their own way in their own plodding time. On and on . . . and on. Creak, creak . . . the swaying of the boats was like some grotesque nightmarish rhythm. She Then out of the wilderness ahead she heard a shout. "Hey . . . here your horse, darling!" And Halcy jumped aboard.

The child was very sick. The threat had to be heeded. Caddy forgot her injured feelings. She helped rapidly. The mother, worn and harassed, thanked both with tears in her eyes. And together they drank coffee beside a humble kitchen stove, and ate huge slices of thick, buttered bread. "Not what Halcy had planned for Christmas eve, yet, curiously enough, it seemed better than the other. It had . . . she tried to think it out more strength and show in it."

"She smiled at Halcy. "This is positively the best Christmas eve I ever spent in my life!" she whispered.

Behind a large buttered slice of bread he kissed her. "You are the perfect pattern of a country doctor's wife," he whispered back.

San Francisco's Water Dream Comes True

From Hotchkiss Lake in the Sierra Nevada, mountain water tumbles by gravity through a pipe system into San Francisco, 170 miles away, culminating in a plant engineering that took 22 years to complete and cost $100,000,000. The project can deliver 60,000,000 gallons of water daily, and develop 100,000 electrical horsepower. At left, above, is Hotchkiss Lake, source of San Francisco's new water supply. Below are shown the pipes which convey mountain water to the city, along the route indicated by the map at right.

Tractor Wheel Has Interesting History

When the Belle Glade Realty Company's office building was moved, several hundred tons of a filling station at the corner of state road No. 25 and Avenue A, were exposed to view a large wheel and questions were asked about the wheel. The answer brought recollection of early days when the wheel was made by this wheel and the one at the standing filling station further down Avenue A are from a big tractor that H. F. Pierce brought in from California about 1920.

The tractor was owned by the Best Manufacturing Company and was used to haul material with it. One of the wheels laid in front of the Myers hotel building at the corner of state road No. 25 and Avenue A, in which with which flowers were planted.

The tractor was a steam engine, having a boiler, no gasoline being used in the engine. It was intended to run down elders and clear land but the surface water was not fit for use in boilers. The big tractor was abandoned on the point that was on the route of a county road and when a construction crew got to it they dismantled the tractor to get it off of the right of way.

Dangerous Business -- Seed "Bargains" (?)

When will they be paid for them? By whom? With what? Will planters pay with their crop for the seed "bargains" (?) offered elsewhere? Not if they know the truth!

When a struggle for seed sales puts price first, something is "skipped" in growing it. Different from most other "bargains" (?)—when you buy seed produced on a price-first basis, YOUR ENTIRE CROP IS AT STAKE. YOU LOSE not only the first cost of such seed, but YOUR TOTAL INVESTMENT on that crop, as well as the seed money you have enjoyed by planting seed grown on a healthy, intelligent, quality-first basis.
